have insured a percection or ensemble which received its due reward in the FURORE OF ENTHUSIASM with which the public greeted the opera on Monday and Wednesday evenings. The management have been careful in producing a style of opera new to this country to choose from the extensive French repertoire a work which peculiarly suits the cultivated American taste, having charming music, a diversified and brilliant action, and beneath the counte clement which provokes laughter, an underpiot poetical and pathetic in the working. All this relieved by solos, duels, &c., of the most brilliant and popularly effective music and an instrumentation as delicious as it is deliciate. The press, as well as the public, has been speedy in recognizing the beauty of the new production.

"Les Dragons de Villara' was produced with remarkably good effect, and was received with an enthusiasm hardly to be expected from an audience so long devoted to the coarser quality of musical extravaganza."

"The comic opera of Aime Maillara's is a charming composition, with all the vivacity and variety of the best pieces of the Offenbach school, and with a substantial musical character in which those exity and contains at least one acter in which those extra species, and contains at least one allows fertility of invention and scholarable. Irma and Aujac both acted and sang admirably."

"The choruses, male and female, are good; the music, solos, ducts and choruses are, we repeat, delightful and refreching. The whole make-up and execution of the piece are exceedingly graceful and picturesque."

The World says:
"Altogether, the new opera is an enterance, and it is elegantly put upon the stage.
